When it comes to balancing their budgets, grad students and postdocs usually try to pack as much value into as little spending as possible. This immensely practical workshop shows attendees how to “hack” their budgets by decreasing their spending in key necessary areas. Attendees will submit their spending data on housing, utilities, transportation, and food in advance through a survey. Dr. Roberts will present the crowdsourced data and invite attendees to share with one another their strategies and tips, focusing on university- and city-specific insights.
